Turn back, then 100 years or so, with me, to the last days of a simple political connection with England, and you will find that this trail which has scrawled so many pages of her history had glided off, had swiveled off, as it were, and left at least a few decent pages in what is known as the Gratton chapter or Grattan period.

What that period produced I will not undertake to enumerate. Of what is known as the Grattan parliament I will not trouble you with an opinion. But John Mitchell tells us that no legislative body sitting in one house ever possessed so large a number of great orators, learned lawyers and accomplished gentlemen. That was the parliament in the p the programme which began at 8 o'clock.

After an overture by the Colonial orchestra, John B. Stanton made the address of welcome in which he described in an admirable way what a benefit in many different ways membership in the club meant to the men of that section of the West Side. The programme continued as follows for the guests and members assembled in the billiard room of the pleasant clubhouse on West Main street: Orchestra selection; violin solo Miss Helen Royce; vocal solo, Ah, I Have Sighed to Rest Me, J. J. Sullivan; orchestra selection; violin solo Miss Helen Royce; vocal solo, Have You Got Another Girl at Home Like Magy? Joseph Sheriden, with Sodality quartette; intermission; buck and wing dancing, Tillett and Maffitt; solo, Within Your Eyes, T. F. NOANK WOMAN ELECTED.

I believe that Ireland alone, in or out of parliament, cannot achieve ther independence. I believe that peaceful agitation can never accomplish it, and that guerrilla warfare is worse than useless. For manifold reasons I believe that a country, like an army, should have its outposts and sentinels beyond its confines, to combat the attacks from without and to tranquillize the forces within. So I would advise you, in absence of better prospects, to stand loyally behind your envoys in parliament, and to strengthen them with your moral and financial support. And, in the evoltion of time, let us hope that the Irish youth, having learned at his mother's knee the teachings of her faith and patriotism, and from the whole wide civilized world the wrongs and sorrows of his native land, may yet be able to attune his ear to the tread of marching feet and study the rudiments of that science that has made his gallant countrymen famous as master minds in all the great military centers of the world.

One of the Hermans at least is an ex-convict.

The police say the Hermans and Haro, Australians, came to Bridgeport only a short time ago, but already have become the most conspicuous residents of the Tenderloin section. The Hermans being owners of automobiles and displaying other evidences of wealth. Reports of indescribable depravity having come to the police and prosecuting attorney in connection with their resorts, the police began investigating and disclosed the alleged connection of the three resorts, in Water street, and in State street.

Investigation by the police of the past records of the Hermans brought to light many unsavory details, and after conferring with Superintendent Birmingham last night. Prosecutor Delaney decided that Bridgeport was no place for the gang. So he issued the warrants with the idea of rounding up the gang breparatory to driving them out of town—Bridgeport Standard.

the city of Waterbury. Practically all the returns have been made by the corporations either to the government direct or through the agent. Special Agents Byrnes and Chapman, having completed their work in this city, are now engaged in other parts of the district, which includes the northwestern part of New Haven county. Among the larger places still to be canvassed in part are Ansonis, Derby and Shelton.

The work was started early in February, and has progressed most satisfactorily in this section. J. Olin Howe, who has charge of the collection of the statistics in this state, believes that, as far as this district is concerned, another month will see it practically completed. This would conclude the collection of the schedules by the first week in May. Satisfactory progress is also being made in other districts of the state, according to Mr. Howe.

The plan of operations has been changed from that employed five years ago, in that a card index system has been devised which will be used to enable the agents to inform the officials in charge of the work when statistics are refused and why they have been unable to obtain them. The index cards are to be attached to the schedules by the agents. In this way more complete information is secured by the government.—Waterbury Republican.
